REST MADE EASY

There Will Be Less Sleeplessness When Barre People Learn This.

Can't rest at night with a bad back, a lame, a weak or an aching one. Doan's Kidney Pills are for bad backs. They cure every form of kidney trouble. From common backache to diabetes. They are endorsed by Barre people. Mrs. Frank Jones of 50 South Main street, Barre, Vt., says: "About five years ago I had such an awful pain in my back that I could hardly get around the house. If I arose quickly after stooping I had spells of dizziness and dark spots before my eyes, while at night it was almost impossible for me to sleep. I was so restless. One day when my back was so bad that I had to go around in a stooped position I was advised to get Doan's Kidney Pills at E. A. Drown's drug store. I procured a supply and commenced taking the remedy. In a few days I knew I was being benefited, for my back became stronger and better. I continued taking Doan's Kidney Pills until the pains in my back disappeared. I had no more of the dizziness and could sleep well at night. At times since then, when I overwork or take cold, there have been recurrences of the trouble in a mild form. I then take a few doses of Doan's Kidney Pills and they have never failed to relieve me. My husband has also used this medicine with the same beneficial results. We would not be without them in the house."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-McMillan Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States. Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.

What a Dress Was Responsible For.

(Original.)

There were music and dancing and feasting. In a recess sat a couple, as couples have sat from the beginning of the world, first under the primeval forest, then in a skin covered dwelling and now in splendid residences. The man was in the conventional black, the woman in a dream of a costume that had just been turned out at the hands of an artist.

"Your answer is final?" asked the man almost with a moan.

"Yes."

"But you have admitted that you could be very happy with me?"

"The happier I could be the more miserable I would be."

"What do you mean?"

"In poverty I would suffer in seeing you suffer."

"But you might wait for something better than poverty. At the gold fields I shall!"

"A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush."

"Well?" anxiously.

"Within a few days I shall be engaged to a man whose fortune is not in the bowels of the earth."

It was with a sickening sensation about the heart that he went away from the place where he had been told that all he cared to strive for was denied him. He turned and looked back at the lights, and the music came to him in mockery. Should he go to the river and end it all or carry out his intention to go to the gold fields? The former course was but a momentary weakness; the latter would take him far away from the girl who was about to pass to another.

A man with a few streaks of gray in his hair and beard entered a ballroom.

At the farther end a woman stood with her back to him. The moment his eye lighted on her costume he started. Fifteen years before the girl who had worn that dress or its counterpart had refused him and told him that she was about to marry a man whose fortune was a real tangible thing, not a dream of the future. The figure was the same, and the hair, like hers, was jet black. He advanced, and when still at a distance she turned. She was like his lost love, too much like her for the interval of years that had passed since he had seen her. He had expected to see her look older. But it was she. Of that he was quite sure.

She walked past him on the arm of an attendant, but gave no heed to the newcomer who was so much interested in her. He was not surprised that she did not recognize him. If she had not changed he had. He had been buried in a wilderness and had done nothing but dig in the earth.

"That," he said to a friend, pointing at the same time to the girl, "is or was Miss Howes?"

"Yes, Miss Howes."

"Please present me to her without speaking my name plainly, so that she will not hear it."

The introduction was made and "Donald King" so distorted as to sound like another name.

"Are you a resident of the city?" asked the girl by way of introducing conversation.

"I was at one time. I have been away a long time."

"I thought you must be a stranger, since I don't remember ever to have seen you before."

"You have known me well."

"I? She looked at him searchingly."

"I must admit that you have passed out of my memory."

"That's natural. It's years since we parted. I might not have recognized you had it not been for something to guide me."

"And that is?"

The orchestra gave the call for a dance. A man came hurrying up to Miss Howes and led her away.

Donald King laid his plans to make more than a casual acquaintance of his former love and kept his identity so well concealed that he did not reveal himself. He was careful to chat with her only on subjects entirely disconnected with their past affair and learned little more about her life since then than she knew about his. He wished to know why she had not married, as she had intended, but feared to reveal himself by asking. He made rather quick love, but the lady seemed inclined to listen.

Finally he revealed himself in this wise:

"When I went away you said that you considered a bird in the hand worth two in the bush. Why did you not take the bird in the hand?"

"You speak in riddles."

"You are the woman I loved and the only woman I shall ever love. I might not have recognized you on my return had it not been that you wore the same dress as the night before my departure, when you told me there was no hope for me on account of my poverty. But on my return I recognized you, and you excited in me the same."

"Are you better of your former ailment? You mistook me for some one else? That dress was given my older sister years ago by my cousin, Edith Howes. My sister wore it occasionally, and now that its sleeves and other things in its makeup have come again into fashion I have been making use of it."

"And you are not Edith Howes?"

"No. I am Rebecca Howes."

Donald King married Rebecca Howes. One day while driving with his wife they met a woman fat and forty with prematurely white hair. Rebecca smiled at her.

"Who is she?" asked the husband.

"Edith Howes, the only woman you ever loved," replied his wife, with a laugh. EMMA LINE C. BURKE.

"When my friends thought I was about to take my leave of this world, on account of indigestion, nervousness and general debility," writes A. A. Chisholm, Treadwell, N. Y., "and when it looked as if there was no hope left, I was persuaded to try Electric Bitters, and I rejoice to say that they are curing me. I am now doing business again as of old, and am still gaining daily." Best tonic medicine on earth. Guaranteed by the Red Cross pharmacy. 50c.

The Brown Rot.

The brown rot is the most troublesome disease to which the plum is subject, but this disease and the curculio may be at the same time controlled by spraying with bordeaux mixture to which has been added some insecticide, such as paris green, arsenite of soda, arsenate of lead or disperse. —Bureau of Plant Industry.

Boston Lettuce.

Probably there is not a week and perhaps not a day in the year when lettuce is not sold in the Boston market, excepting Sundays and holidays, when the market is closed, and it is all grown in the market gardens and greenhouses around Boston. More than that, there are many seasons when the surplus crop is sent out to supply New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and other cities, and the reputation of Boston lettuce is such that its price at those places is often much higher than that of the locally grown supply.—American Cultivator, Boston.
